Ciliate Biology international symposium Eminent scientists debate at Acharya Narendra Dev College

Dr. Ravi Chaturvedi

Ciliates are a diverse group of unicellular eukaryotes that vary widely in size, shape, body plan, and ecological niche. Studies on patterning and regeneration have been revived and facilitated by modern omics methods. Cryo-electron microscopy and tomography have revolutionised the structural study of complex macromolecules such as telomerase, avenues of research and

DNA elimination, gene scrambling, and mating type determination have been deciphered, revealing interesting adaptations of processes that have parallels in other kingdoms of life. Studies of common eukaryotic processes, such as intracellular trafficking, meiosis, and histone modification, reveal conservation as well as unique adaptations in these organisms that are evolutionarily distant from other models. Continual improvement of genetic and molecular tools makes ciliates accessible models for all levels of education and research. Such advances open new highlight the importance of ciliate research.

Acharya Narendra Dev College (University of Delhi) has become beacons of light on Ciliate Biology in India. Recently, the college organised an International Symposium on Ciliate Biology 2025 & Interdisciplinary Research under the tutelage of the Indian Society of Ciliate Biology (ISOCB), Indian Network of Soil Contamination Research (INSCR) and International Society of Protistologists (ISOP). The landmark event started streaming with the Inaugural at India Habitat Centre, New Delhi with the gathering of eminent scientists from Ciliate Biology laboratories across countries and continents.

The salient feature of the symposium was plenary session of invited lectures by 36 national and 11 international delegates (including 6 young scientists and 31 women scientists) who presented their trail-blazing research on Ciliate Biology and Inter-Disciplinary Research. As
